Seen & Heard Around MURRAY

A little known program is doing all right in Murray and recently got a shot in the arm by two more mothers helping out.

This is the Cub Scout program which was under the direction of Bill Adams last year and is now under the guidance of Captain George Kimball.

They met last Friday at the high school and over one hundred mothers and fathers were present to see the program.

Five Murray mothers have taken over the job as Den Mothers in the Cub Pack and three more could be used very much. There are a lot of small boys from eight to ten who want to be Cubs, but can't be, because of the fact there is no place for them.

At the meeting Friday all the Cubs were dressed in "armor." It was pretty realistic. The armor was made of cardboard painted with aluminum paint.

Armor was complete with knee coverings and helmets made of socks, all painted in aluminum.

Bill Nall was complete with trappings.

Next month the Cubs will go out to the college and inspect the gear of the ROTC. This will include the machine guns, rifles, pistols, mortars, etc. and they will stand retreat. This apparently went over well with the Cubs when the announcement was made.

Capt. Kimball will do a swell job with the Cubs.

That's another example of "somebody from out of town coming here to live and taking over an important place in the community."

There should never be what is called a "stranger" in Murray. They make too valuable a citizen to be called that.

Local Church Plans World Wide Move

A spokesman for Jehovah's Witnesses announced plans today for delivering a special message to the world. Mr. Stephen Ferrara, local presiding minister for the Murray, Kentucky congregation, revealed some of the details of this special campaign, which includes sponsoring the public lecture entitled "Christendom or Christianity which one is the Light of the World?" All congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses throughout the world (there are approximately 1400 in 158 lands) will participate. Mr. Stephen Ferrara will deliver this discourse locally, to which the public is cordially invited. It will be delivered at Kingdom Hall of Jehovah's Witnesses in Murray at 100 North 13th Street, at 2:00 P. M.

After the discourse a new 32 page booklet containing extraordinary information will be given free to each person in attendance. Some 600,000 of Jehovah's Witnesses will then begin distribution of millions of copies of this special message in many languages throughout the world. It is the desire of Jehovah's Witnesses to place a copy in every home. Mr. Ferrara said the contents of this specially prepared booklet had not yet been revealed to the public, but its message was unique and would be of special campaign give indication that this may well be one of the greatest religious proclamations in modern history. Mr. Ferrara said. He went on to tell of local plans that have been made, stating that Jehovah's Witnesses here are ready and eagerly look forward to this special campaign.

Hull Still In Serious Condition

WASHINGTON, Mar. 28 (AP)—Former Secretary of State Cordell Hull was still on the critical list at the Bethesda, Md., naval hospital today, although he had regained consciousness following a stroke he suffered Saturday.

Doctors at the hospital said the 83-year-old statesman is no longer in a coma but "his basic diagnosis remains unchanged, and he remains on the critical list."

The hospital said it will issue periodic bulletins on the condition of the former congressman and father of the U.S. reciprocal trade program.

Physicians said Hull suffered a cerebral accident. Apparently a brain hemorrhage of some type—at 3 a. m. Saturday.

He was stricken at a hotel, where he has been living in care of his niece, Mrs. Katherine Ehrhardt of San Antonio, Tex., since the death of his wife last year.

Hull has been in poor health for many years.

Prints Will Be Exhibited In Memorial Gallery

A collection of 66 original Currier and Ives prints will be placed on exhibition at Murray State College April 4 in the Mary Ed McCoy Hall Gallery in the Fine Arts Building.

The collection will continue on display until April 16. The prints are insured for $100,000 and many pieces are rare collector's items. Currier and Ives lithographs are a remarkable collection of 19th century "Americana" embracing the city and country life of that era and capitalizing also on some historical events of that time.

Since the collection's first appearance eight years ago it has toured through the states and Hawaii by popular demand. Currier and Ives prints have enjoyed a return to popularity in recent years and are much sought after by collectors and interior decorators. This popularity is credited to the exhibit.

The collection was started 19 years ago and already 204 prints have appeared in calendars published by the Travelers Insurance Company. These calendars have awakened an interest in these portrayals of "Americana" which present the urban and rural life of the mid-19th century, as well as some of its great historical events.

The exhibition is open and free to the public. The Fine Arts Building is open weekdays from 9 a.m. until 9 p.m. On Saturday the gallery is open from 9 a.m. until 5 o'clock and on Sundays from 1:30 until 5 p.m.

The collection is owned and circulated by the Travelers Insurance Company; Frazee, Melugin and Holtorf of Murray are the agents.

Center Will Aid Purchase Area

PADUCAH (AP)—J. Foster Jones, chairman of the board of school and treatment center for crippled children here, announced the facilities of the center will be expanded to serve the entire 10-county Purchase area.

The Paducah center, which now serves 45 children, will widen its operations with funds from the Kentucky Society for Crippled Children raised through the Sale of Easter Seals.

The area which will be served under the expanded program will include Ballard, Carlisle, Graves, Marshall, Fulton, Calloway, Hickman, McCracken and Washington counties.

The center here is the newest affiliate of the Kentucky Society for Crippled Children and is already the largest of three such schools in Kentucky.

Other crippled children centers supported by the Easter Seal funds are the Cardinal Hill nursery at Lexington for Fayette and surrounding counties and the Opportunity School at Covington which serves Kenton, Boone and Campbell counties.

An expansion program is also planned for the Covington school which will be financed with funds raised in a $50,000 drive in that area. A new rapy wing will be added to the present convocation facilities.

Don Ping To Retire From Gridiron

Don Ping, head football coach at Evansville College, announced his retirement from the gridiron last week at a meeting of the college trustees.

After eight years of coaching at Evansville College, Ping turned the head coach position over to Paul Beck Beck, who directed the Aces last fall while was on leave of absence, was appointed with the recommendation of Ping and the trustees.

Ping will remain at Evansville College as Athletic Director and baseball coach. During his eight years at Evansville College, his teams compiled 38 wins, 35 losses, and 5 ties. Evansville tied for the Ohio Valley Conference in 1948, and in 1949 they won it outright. Both years they played in the Refrigerator Bowl and won both encounters, defeating Missouri Valley 13-7 in 1948 and Hillsdale, Michigan 22-7 in 1949.

Coach Beck has been at Evansville College since 1947 as assistant coach under Ping. Last fall he piloted the Aces to their first winning season since 1949, with 5 wins and 4 losses.

Beck will be assisted by Forrest Page, who came to E. C. from Noblesville, Indiana last fall to assist Beck while Ping was on his leave.

The 1955 football outlook is good at Evansville College, since Beck has the majority of his squad back that finished second in the Indiana Collegiate Conference last year.

Spring Finally Arrives With Some Warm Weather

By UNITED PRESS
Spring finally came up with some warm weather today, but it was too little and too late. The season's first disastrous week had claimed more than 70 lives and more than 30 million dollars in crop losses.

The severe young season still held parts of New England in a wintry grip following a mammoth snow storm which piled drifts 42 feet high in upper New York state, blocked roads, and stranded scores of motorists and skiers.

In the southland, warming weather came too late to save multi-million dollar fruit crops. Temperatures rose five to 12 degrees in the East and jumped even higher in the storm-battered Great Plains. But it was still below freezing as far south as the northern portions of the gulf states.

The wintry weather has accounted for at least 74 deaths across the country since spring bowed in last Monday.

Farmers had yet to total the full damage to their crops, particularly in the frost-bitten southland. But it was certain to run over 50 million dollars.

Spring fanned its week of destruction Sunday by sending a mammoth snow storm blowing through the lower St. Lawrence Valley into Canada.

Parts of upper New York state got 20 inches of snow and some drifts were 12 feet high. A trucker's collision on a highway near Boonville killed one man and the state thoroughways was closed from Fultonville to Buffalo.

Snow-bound motorists abandoned 30 cars on the thoroughway near Utica and 150 skiers were stranded at Turin. The 65-member Bowdoin College Glee Club was marooned at Constantia.

The snow storm was accompanied by fires which left 30 persons homeless at an Auburn mill town, and destroyed a potato storage warehouse at nearby Granby Center, causing damage estimated at $150,000.

New York City was raked with 35 mile-per-hour winds which tore off antennas, roofing and wires and sent trees crashing.

Firemen said the plentiful supply of water from the flooded rivers enabled the Paducah and Salem fire departments to check the blaze before it swept through the business district. Firemen rescued Donna Whitties, 12, when she fell into the floodwaters during the firefighting operation.

Students of Flemingsburg Elementary School assembled at Flemingsburg High School to be assigned temporary classrooms, in the high school, churches and other makeshift quarters. The grade school was destroyed by fire late Saturday night.

Firemen Sunday used dynamite to blow down the few walls not leveled by the fire, which left 179 pupils without a school building.

County Superintendent Frank D. Scott said the building was erected in 1920 at a cost of $40,000, but that an adequate replacement would cost several times that amount.

A fire near Paris late Sunday destroyed a general store and filling station, set off a series of explosions and trapped several customers inside a riverside restaurant on the Jacktown Pike for several hours. It also scorched, but not seriously damaged, a historic covered bridge across Hinkston Creek.

Hundreds of rounds of ammunition in the Mack Ritchie store blew up and one bullet struck an unidentified boy in the leg. It merely grazed the skin and the wound required only first aid treatment.

Several customers in a restaurant and dance hall to the rear of the store were trapped by the flames, but the fire was put out before the dance hall burned. A 500-gallon fuel oil tank in the building also exploded.

Total damage to the store was estimated by the owner, Mack Ritchie, at $38,000 or more, partly covered by insurance.

A fire at Crestwood, in Olham County, destroyed the greenhouse of the Klein Nursery and Floral Co., along with some 100,000 flower and vegetable plants.

The owner, W. C. Edds, estimated the loss at a minimum of $10,000. It was not covered by insurance, he said.

Mrs. Imes Will Head Almo PTA

The regular meeting of the Almo P. T. A. was held Thursday afternoon at 2:00 in the school lunchroom.

In the absence of the president Wilson Ganitt the meeting was conducted by Mr. Miller principal of the school. The minutes of the last meeting and a financial report was read by the secretary, Mrs. Bill Miller. It was decided to pay for installation of a blower in the lunch room and buy a new coffee maker. The nominating committee reported that next year officers will be, President - Mrs. John Imes, Vice President - Mrs. Odell Colson, Secretary-Treasurer - Mrs. Homer Fred Williams.

The program was furnished by Mrs. McDougal's second grade pupils. The group also enjoyed hearing some songs and readings on the new tape recorder.

The attendance award was also won by Mrs. McDougal.

The last meeting will be third Thursday night in April, with a pot luck supper and new officers will be installed.

Costly Fires Hit Over State

By United Press
A series of costly fires hit Kentucky over the weekend, causing damage not precisely estimated but ranging into several hundreds of thousands of dollars.

A fire at Smithland which swept through two buildings and caused damage estimated at $75,000 might have been much worse except for the flooded condition of the Ohio and Cumberland rivers which meet there.

Firemen said the plentiful supply of water from the flooded rivers enabled the Paducah and Salem fire departments to check the blaze before it swept through the business district. Firemen rescued Donna Whitties, 12, when she fell into the floodwaters during the firefighting operation.

Students of Flemingsburg Elementary School assembled at Flemingsburg High School to be assigned temporary classrooms, in the high school, churches and other makeshift quarters. The grade school was destroyed by fire late Saturday night.

Double Funeral Will Be Held At 2:00 Today

The body of Mrs. Max Nance was found yesterday at 9:30 a.m. by the Murray Rescue Squad, on a flooded island in the Buffalo River. The icy waters had kept the body in excellent condition, even though it had been there since last Tuesday night.

A comprehensive search was begun yesterday morning about 6:30 by the Murray Rescue Squad and many volunteers. Ten cars and one truck left Murray yesterday morning at 3:30 with fifty three persons, to aid in the search. Boats, motors and other equipment were carried in the truck.

A spokesman for the group said that when the scene of the tragedy was reached, the Rescue Squad organized the large group into two parties.

Each party began a systematic search on each side of the swift river.

After a search of about three hours, the body was located on an island about one-half mile from where the automobile was found. The water covered the island about two and one half feet, and it was grown up in bushes and willows.

A huge drift had collected on the island, and it was here where the body was found.

The river was described as being very treacherous and swift. Mrs. Nance's rings were still on her hand, but her shoes were missing. One shoe was found last week which was identified as being hers.

Rescue Squad members making the trip were John Shroat, W. O. Spencer, Winfield Allison, John Bowker, Marvin Harris, Teddy Alexander, Jean Green, and Bill Cain.

The body was taken to the funeral home at Friendship, Tennessee, and a double funeral will be held "this afternoon at 2:00 o'clock."

Bro. Paul T. Lykes, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Murray will conduct the services at the Friendship Methodist Church.

The body of Mrs. Nance, which was found on Wednesday, has been held at the funeral home until the body of Mrs. Nance could be found.

The tragedy occurred last Tuesday night as Mrs. and Mrs. Nance and Noah Smith were returning to Murray after attending an automobile auction in Columbia, Tennessee. The flooding Buffalo River was out of its banks and flooding the highway over which they were traveling.

Apparently the car was swept from the highway and the three occupants drowned.

150,000 Expected To Attend State Baptists Revivals

Some 150,000 people are expected to be attending evangelistic services at a Baptist church in Kentucky each night during the period April 10 to 24, according to the Rev. Elmer M. Taylor, Louisville, evangelist secretary for the Executive Board of the General Association of Baptists in Kentucky.

These are the dates that Kentucky Baptists will participate in the nationwide simultaneous revivals which Southern Baptists are holding in March and April. A majority of the 2,254 churches of the state Baptist association are expected to hold revivals during the period, Mr. Taylor said.

Purpose of the revivals will be to awaken the churches spiritually and to win as many converts as possible to the Christian faith.

Preparations, already several weeks underway, are now nearing completion. To date, these have included a special week of Bible study in January, the annual state Evangelistic Conference in Louisville Jan. 10-12, religious censuses of the various church communities, study courses in soul-winning and evangelism, in progress or yet to be held are district associational rallies in many associations for men, women, musicians, and youth.

Prayer preparation for the revivals calls for a week of prayer immediately preceding the actual services. In this connection, Mr. Taylor estimated that 7,000 cottage prayer meetings will be held in church members' homes during the week of April 4.

Since most of the Kentucky Baptist churches will be engaged in the revivals at the same time, the evangelists will largely come from out of the state. Many pastors, however, will conduct their own meetings.

In churches holding full two-week meetings the middle Sunday, April 17, will be designated high attendance Sunday for Sunday School. The goal will be to break all previous attendance records. A similar goal for Training Union will be set for the final Sunday night of the revivals, April 24.

For the nationwide crusade the nation was divided into three zones, and revival dates for the zones were staggered. Thus March 6-20 were the dates for the Tropical zone. Central zone dates are March 27-April 10. Dates for the Northern zone, in which Kentucky is located, are April 10-24.

Because of a record-breaking increase in Sunday School enrollment in 1954 and the 1955 evangelistic crusade.

'Open-or-Closed' Buildings For Farms

Here's the newest development by farm building experts to provide economical shelter, easy handling and convenient shop facilities for farm machinery, known as the Quonset Rigid Frame 28, the 28-ft. wide prefabricated steel structure may be open or closed at sides. It has many other uses, such as cattle shelter, feeding barn, hay storage and self-feeding, loading barn, milking parlor and milk house; hog shelter and farrowing.

If you were asked to design the most-practical and generally useful building for farms; what features would you come up with? It would have to be economical; so simple that it could be erected easily; so versatile it could well serve almost any farm building function; durable; expandable to fit your future plans—and with all these, have doors big enough to make big machinery easily maneuverable into and out of the structure.

After months of preparatory work by its farm building engineers, the Great Lakes Steel Corporation's Iron-Steel Division has developed a structure designed to meet these specifications. An addition to the Quonset line of buildings, it will be known as the Rigid-Frame 28—it's rigid-framed and 28 feet wide.

First of the new buildings was put in service test early this year on the farm of Dave Poor, near Warsaw, Ind. Farmers who've seen it think the engineers hit their target.

The "28" building differs from other farm Quonsets in that it's rigid-framed, straight-sided and gable-roofed rather than the famous arch-rib construction. The manufacturer explains that this departure was dictated by requirements for extra large side-wall doors desired in a building for machinery storage.

The basic building is 40 ft. long, with 20 ft. between columns. Length may be increased by any number of additional 20-foot sections. Sides may be left open or enclosed with steel sheets or sliding doors. Endwalls may be solid or equipped with sliding doors for a 14' x 13' 6" opening, walk-in door and windows.

Tired Of Seven Foot Centers?

By BOB MCKOWEN
United Press Sports Writer
HUNTINGTON, W. Va. (AP)—Tired of 7-foot centers? Is your attitude about tall basketball players a little jaded?

Okay, then you "reach for the moon goons" and "mezzanine dodgers," you've had it. Goodbye for now Will The Stilt Chamberlain, Swede, The Reed Hallbrook, and Bill The Cool Uhl.

Take a look at the latest cage rage where the spry small fry take over.

It's the International Biddy Basketball Tournament beginning here Thursday, and involving 15 teams from all over the United States plus one from Puerto Rico.

Have Size Limits

The players are 9 to 12 and none can be more than 5 feet, 6-inches tall. They play on a scaled down court with a small ball and shoot at baskets 8 1/2 feet high instead of 10 feet. And the quarters are only six minutes long.

The other teams are the host Huntington outfit, the All-Stars from Puerto Rico who are from all over the island, Syracuse, N.Y., Homestead, Pa., Gary, Ind., Daytona Beach, Fla., August, Ga., Highwood, Ill., Atlantic City, N.J., Santa Monica, Calif., New Orleans, La., Paris, Tenn., and Trowbridge, Conn.

The Syracuse team sponsored by the Syracuse Nationals of the National Basketball Association and the Commission of Parks and Recreation is bringing in the Puerto Ricans. Most of the others are sponsored by church, civic, community, or industrial organizations.

Rupp All For It

Coach Adolph Rupp of Kentucky's Wildcats, who generally likes his basketball players a little older and taller, will be the principal speaker at a Biddy banquet.

"These kids are our college stars of tomorrow," said Rupp who heartily endorses the entire program.

"The idea of Biddy Basketball is to give the kids a feeling of participation in organized athletics at an early age," said Paul Bromley of Huntington, who is the director of this year's meet. "It also helps to curb juvenile delinquency by getting the kids off the streets."

Jay Archer of Scanton, National Biddy Basketball commissioner, who designed the game, said the teams here were the survivors of competition which involved more than 250,000 boys throughout the nation. Local and regional eliminations preceded the national tournament.

One Good Turn

DETROIT, MICH.—Today's congested traffic and parking problems has caused many motorists to wish their car could "turn on a dime." Bearing this in mind, the Hudson publicity department used this oversized coin to illustrate the maneuverability of the 1955 Hudson Rambler. The four-door Cross Country station wagon shown here has a turning diameter of 38 feet; the two-door Rambler series turns in 36 feet—best among American production cars.

TREASURY SECRETARY George M. Cancer Clinic Raided By Officers

PORTAGE, Pa. (AP) — Pennsylvania State Sen. John J. Haluska vowed today that a cancer clinic he operates jointly with a Texas naturopath will be "open as usual" Monday despite a raid by federal officers.

More than 500,000 red and black pills which the government charged were misbranded were seized by federal officers in a raid on the clinic Friday.

U. S. Marshals from Pittsburgh, armed with an order signed by Federal Judge Wallace Gourley, also confiscated leaflets publicizing the tablets as "effective" treatment for internal cancer.

The clinic was opened three weeks ago by Haluska and Harry M. Hoxsey, Dallas, Tex. Naturopath.

"We'll be open Monday morning as usual," Haluska said. "We have patients coming from five states. We're operating under the laws of Pennsylvania and Dr. Hoxsey, formerly of Pittsburgh, is our medical director. He is a properly licensed medical doctor and also a doctor of osteopathy."

U. S. Atty. John W. Melville in Pittsburgh filed a petition for the raid after agents of the food and drug administration conducted an extensive investigation of the clinic.

Haluska said he had written President Eisenhower requesting an FBI investigation of the U. S. Food and Drug Administration. Inspectors and deputies of the agency had joined marshals in the raid.

Under Judge Gourley's order, the raiders confiscated 10 cartons — each containing 26,332 black pills and four drums, each containing 62,900 red pills. The government said Hoxsey regarded the pills as an "essential" part of his purported "cure."

Tell Her It's MURDER

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

ANDRUS walked along the path to the white house. Light shone behind the ice-covered glass pane of a door at the end of it. More light from invisible windows beyond spilled on the ice-encrusted grassy bank. Andrus felt for a bell, didn't find one and rapped on the glass. There was no answer. He tried the door. It wasn't locked. He opened it, stepped into a tiny vestibule and went on into a big lighted kitchen.

This was it. This was the room. The plants, the old sofa, the stove, the smell of herbs, the Baltimore rocker, the plates on a rail, the picture of Lake Como above the mantel—and the love birds. They sat, two bright things close together on the edge of the mantel staring at him.

Stew bubbled in a pot on the stove. Where was the woman who was going to eat it? A door in the right wall led to the front of it. He opened the door on a dark hall, a dark staircase, said loudly, "Anybody home?"

Silence. Andrus closed the door and his eye fell on another door behind the stove, in the north wall. It was open a couple of inches. Ah, that was the door that led to the cellar where he and Midnight Miller had gone to get some out of a barrel. He pulled the door wide. There was a light on in the cellar somewhere. He called out again. No reply. He went down steep steps and was in a cement tunnel flanked by budding hemlock in bins.

He walked along the tunnel to where the cellar opened out into a big enclosure, thirty feet long by twenty wide, came to a halt. Light from a bulb in the ceiling fell on whitewashed walls, on garden pools, an old bench, on three barrels in a row against the wall on the left, and on the woman. . . .

Then there was a sharp sound behind and above Andrus. Light on the walls, light on the sprawled body. The door at the head of the stairs slammed shut. The door had a spring lock on it. Andrus knew before he moved that he was sealed up down there in a stony underground fortress with a dead woman and here he would remain until the arrival of the police.

He tried the door at the top of the steps, hopelessly — and was right, it was stout and solid in its frame. Two small windows were securely boarded up. He went into the bins, a small storeroom, and around the walls of the main cellar. The stone work was unbroken. He found no weapon with which to batter down the door at the head of the cellar steps. For all he knew he might be incarcerated here with the dead woman for days. . . . He cut his thoughts sharply, lit a cigarette, leaned against one of the bins, tried to pull smoke into his lungs, and coughed.

Someone else coughed. It was an echo.

The cough came again, a sort of cough, not like his own, a low harsh exhalation. Inhale, exhale. It sounded like snoring.

Andrus, went toward the wine barrels and looked down, unbelievably. It was true. The woman lying there at his feet was making that queer, ugly mechanical sound. Her eyes were still closed and nothing about her stirred, but the sound kept coming through her open mouth.

Not dead. Dying? Perhaps she had a chance—if he could get help. . . . There must be something he could use on that door. Husbanding emotion, shutting it away, he looked around. The garden bench offered nothing, it would splinter to matchwood, a lawn mower, not room to swing it at the top of the steps. If he could get the handle off, but the nuts were rusted on the door at the top of the cellar steps.

A long time later Andrus desisted, a piece of the broken mallet in his hand. The door was as solid as it had been in the beginning. Foot steps overhead in the kitchen. . . . It was hopeless without tools.

He turned—and saw the weapon with which the woman had been attacked. It was lying half under one of the barrels. It was a mallet-shaped affair of heavy wood with a short handle. The head was stained, he picked it up and rapped for the door at the top of the cellar steps.

"A woman down here, hurt, dying. A doctor—" Andrus leaped the remaining steps, blinked in the bright light. The kitchen was filling with men. They kept coming. A voice said, "O.K., Andrus."

It was Sergt. Dupasse with a contingent of the Yonkers police. Detective Tod Hunter was with Dupasse when the arrest was made. Andrus was surrounded and removed, light-tipped, saying nothing, his torn hands dripping blood, his battered face closed. A doctor and an ambulance arrived and the dying woman was carried off on a stretcher. Dupasse beamed and was happy.

A telephone call had brought him to the house, a call in an agitated voice. The desk officer thought it was a man who called in, wasn't it. It was of no consequence. Andrus' description had not only been thrown broadcast, a photograph of him taken before the interrupted wedding had been published that day in the Yonkers Messenger. It was the photograph that turned the trick. The wanted man had been seen entering 11 Clover St. by the side door.

According to him, Andrus had attacked his victim in the cellar to which he had followed her and the wind had blown the door at the top of the steps shut, locking him in, holding him for them, keeping him on ice until they got there.

To any and all questions of motive Dupasse had one answer. The struck woman was a Mrs. Anne Fenn, a widow with one married daughter who lived in Portchester, New York. Mrs. Fenn owned the house and had occupied it for nine or ten years, supporting herself by day work, cleaning, laundry, baby-sitting, etc. Brodsky was known to have been a constant visitor, a nocturnal visitor. He always came late at night, remaining from one to three or four hours.

In the middle of these proceedings Todhunter wandered off on his own. Unlike Dupasse, he was deeply disturbed. He had been in the cemetery that afternoon. He had seen Susan Dwight and Lofting. He hadn't seen Mrs. Fenn, but he had already predicated her—after listening to Brodsky's sister, Mrs. Potter, and Mrs. Potter's questions about her mother's money. Inquiries among Brodsky's tavern companions, vague though the answers were, led him to Glover St., just too late to prevent another tragedy.

In the course of his meanderings Todhunter had an encounter that distressed him. Outing in the seamy darkness he came on Susan Dwight, huddled in the Pelham car halfway down the little road. She knew what had happened. Finding Andrus gone from the barn loft she had hurried down there and had arrived as they were taking him away.

Todhunter had a soft spot for pretty women. He thought Susan Dwight very lovely sitting behind the wheel, her slender face pale, her eyes luminous pools in the light of the dash lamps. She was in a state of shock, probably wouldn't have talked to him so freely under other circumstances. He told her who he was and, guardedly, what he was doing. His sympathy broke her down. Finally, after a long and informative conversation he persuaded her to go home, watched the car turn and move on with continued work with a sigh.

Oldest Known New Testament In Washington

WASHINGTON — The world's oldest known manuscript of the entire New Testament found a new resting place today in the Library of Congress.

The 1,600-year-old volume formerly had been possessed for generations by the Malek Yonan family, now of Washington.

For the first time in its ancient history, the manuscript was covered by insurance — $1,500,000 worth — for 1½ hours — as it was taken from a bank vault here and moved to the Library.

The bulky, black leather-bound volume contains 272 double pages on which are handwritten in Aramaic the stories of the New Testament. It is expected to serve as an invaluable primary source to Bible scholars.

Dr. John Shapley, Catholic University archeology professor who will translate the text to its new owners, the Aramaic Bible Foundation, said it would be presumptuous to try to assess in advance the full significance of the "Yonan Codex."

But he said because the Codex is "apparently our first . . . Whole new testament, it becomes invaluable as a primary source in exegesis." He said the manuscript is in excellent condition.

Codex means a manuscript in book-form as distinguished from scroll. Scholars believe the Yonan Codex originally may have been in scroll form as were the ancient Jewish scriptures, and then was transferred to early Christian book-form sometime between the fourth and fifth centuries.

Imogene Coca May Move Show, H'wood

By VERNON SCOTT
United Press Staff Correspondent

HOLLYWOOD, March 22 (AP) — Imogene Coca slipped quietly into Hollywood last week to see about moving her TV show to Cinema City and to talk to some new writers about her program.

Curled up on the divan of her hotel bungalow, the tiny, rubber-faced comedienne explained she had the best writers in the business for a revue-type show. "But now that we've changed to a situation comedy format we need a different kind of talent."

"And I've been trying to promote a move to California for quite a while. I hope we can do our last nine shows this season from Hollywood."

"I love it out here," she said. "I've already looked at a house to rent—the one that Jack Webb used to have. It's got a swimming pool and everything."

Conversing With Pixies
Talking to Imogene is akin to conversing with pixies. Her luminously expressive eyes are watchful—she's like and elf about to pull a disappearing act.

The timid teletype confines her jokes and face-making to TV and speaks in a serious, barely audible voice.

"I'm the biggest TV fan in captivity," she said. "I used to spend at least 40 hours a week glued to the set. I'd get home from work at six in the evening and watch until 2:30, or whenever the late, late show was over."

"I'm going out more these days, but not on Saturday nights. That's the night of the show, darn it, and I never get to see Jackie Gleason or George Gobel."

The NBC-TV star says her taste runs to drama and mystery programs.

"I like anything gruesome, especially where people get murdered," she smiled.

"Guess I should watch more comedy shows. Even when I go to the movies or the theater I prefer the heavy stuff. I'm a great comedy audience once I start watching but I'll take drama every time."

Imogene says her propensity for melodrama is an outgrowth of her desire to be a dramatic star. "I'd love to play Ophelia in 'Hamlet' but people would laugh at me," she added sadly.

"Our show is coming along better every week. I think. At least we're getting more laughs and I'm more relaxed. I was terribly frightened at first and I think it was because I was with Sid Caesar on 'Show Of Shows' so long."

"To me he's the greatest comedian in the business. And he's such a convincing actor that I used to feel we were actually married at times."

"Television's funny that way. Every time I see 'Medic' I think I'm dying of the same disease as the patient of the show."

"Getting back to Sid," she said. "I miss him great deal. But I think we're both doing well now. And it's nice not to be confused about hat marriage."

"Call' Numbers

SIX-FOOT Pat Thompson, college-educated call-girl who went to Detroit to live after the first Mickey Jelke trial, is now at the current trial in New York, where she testified that Jelke gave a party to toast his "new girl," Marguerite Cordova, after breaking up with Pat Ward. She also said she received some of Pat Ward's telephone numbers from Jelke. Pat Thompson is wife of Richard Short, convicted of living off her prostitution earnings. (International)

Imogene Coca May Move Show, H'wood

By VERNON SCOTT
United Press Staff Correspondent

HOLLYWOOD, March 22 (AP) — Imogene Coca slipped quietly into Hollywood last week to see about moving her TV show to Cinema City and to talk to some new writers about her program.

Curled up on the divan of her hotel bungalow, the tiny, rubber-faced comedienne explained she had the best writers in the business for a revue-type show. "But now that we've changed to a situation comedy format we need a different kind of talent."

"And I've been trying to promote a move to California for quite a while. I hope we can do our last nine shows this season from Hollywood."

"I love it out here," she said. "I've already looked at a house to rent—the one that Jack Webb used to have. It's got a swimming pool and everything."
